

MITCHELL INSTITUTE SENIOR FELLOW

Dr. Matthew Hurley, is a Senior Fellow with the Mitchell Institute for Aerospace Studies, which is based in Arlington, Virginia. In addition, he serves as a docent at the National Museum of the US Air Force.

A retired US Air Force colonel and career intelligence officer, Dr. Hurley completed military assignments with Air Mobility Command, Pacific Air Forces, US Air Forces Europe, NATO Allied Air Forces Northern Europe, the Air Force District of Washington, US Forces Korea, Air University, and the Air Staff. His military service also included contingency duty in Southwest Asia, the former Yugoslavia, and the Horn of Africa, as well as instructional tours at the Air Command and Staff College and the NATO Tactical Leadership Programme. During his final assignment he served as the Chief of Air Force Intelligence, Surveillance, and Reconnaissance Doctrine and Policy.

Dr. Hurley is a Distinguished Graduate of the Air Command and Staff College, US Air Force intelligence officer training, and the US Air Force Academy. He is a past winner of the Air Force Historical Foundation Award and the Franklin C. Wolfe Fellowship in the Humanities. He received his doctorate in Military, European, and African history from The Ohio State University in 2009, having previously earned a master's degree in Russian and Middle Eastern history at the University of Washington.

Dr. Hurley has published and presented numerous works regarding airpower history and operations, insurgency and counterinsurgency, intelligence, and cyber operations. These included lectures and paper presentations at the Mitchell Institute for Aerospace Studies, Mississippi State University, Air University, the Conference of Army Historians, the Japan Air Self-Defense Force Staff College, the Canadian Forces Staff College, and the Belgian Superior Staff College, and the 2015 joint services Vietnam air war symposium. His most recent written publication, "A Arma que Mudou a Guerra" ("The Weapon that Changed the War") was published in the Portuguese Revista Militar in October 2014. In addition to his work for the Mitchell Institute, Dr. Hurley is currently writing a comprehensive history of Portugal's colonial air campaign over Portuguese Guinea during the 1960s and 1970s.
